

FAMILY HOMESTEAD DECLARATION

Declaration of Empress Nefertiti-Mumbi Family Homestead

I, Empress-Kathryne Nefertiti-Mumbi a citizen of the United States of America, have familiarized myself with the philosophy of a way of life that has been set forth in fictional form in the “Ringing Cedars of Russia” book series. The idea of creating a family homestead has inspired me to take action.

I have acquired a plot of land in a remote spot in Hawaii, 3 acres in size, with the goal of establishing a more perfected dwelling land for my family and my descendants, and in memory of our ancestors.

I gave the given spot the name “Empress Nefertiti-Mumbi Family Homestead.” On the land I acquired. I will lay out a garden, dig a pond where fish will breed, and established several families of bees. I will also cultivate berries and vegetables.

I plan to fertilize the land using solely natural and native means of fertilization.

I trust it will be a good thing if there are a lot of families who have the ability and desire to work the land, live on family homesteads near big and small cities, and are able to supply the urban population with a lot of ecologically sound vegetable produce and improve ecological conditions in the counties.

I find it unacceptable that corn, soybeans, and sugar beets farmed in the United States are more than 90% genetically engineered. Furthermore, these goods are frequently of poor quality and dangerous to people, especially children. In addition, these products are also often of low quality and are harmful to humans, especially children.

I presume true that this situation endangers not only the security of the food in our nation but also the populations that reside there.

I deem it unhelpful to point fingers at the government or anyone else in such circumstances for having made this or that error. Not just the society of our nation, but our entire society, has erred. As a result, many cultures are on the verge of experiencing social unrest. In the current climate, it is crucial for each individual to consider what specific actions they can do as soon as possible to effect good change.

The example of nations that have staked their economies on agriculture demonstrates the futility and even destructiveness of this decision. Farmers who are concerned with turning a profit from producing agricultural goods engage in rivalry. They must cultivate toxic genetically engineered crops and employ harmful pesticides and herbicides in order to succeed, endangering the lives of citizens of whole states in the process.

On the family homestead, a family resides and cultivates food to suit both their own needs and the requirements of their relatives who reside in urban areas. The relationship between a family and the land is thus fundamentally different for a family living on a family homestead. The excess generated on the homesteads will stand out from all other products on the shelves of city stores due to its advantageous nature.

Social unrest is a threat in many nations due to the worsening global economic crisis. We need a completely new concept of the family way of life that the public will understand if we are to emerge from this catastrophe. And this way of thinking is presented in the "Ringing Cedars of Russia" book series. I have embraced its essential ideas, and they have motivated me to perform the above-mentioned steps.

Alongside my own family homestead, more than a hundred other families - families whose children are being born and reared in a more perfected ecological setting - have each purchased one hectare of land and are currently constructing their own family homesteads. The practice has demonstrated that they are acting in this way due to this philosophy rather than a money influx.

I am aware that thousands of families are already establishing their family homesteads across various regions of Russia, Ukraine, and Belarus as a result of this philosophy. As soon as a more benevolent legal foundation for this is developed, millions of families intend to do so. Many households have plans to start small businesses and generate agricultural goods.

I wholeheartedly support efforts made by the Russian Federation's government and President to encourage the construction of small houses outside of cities, as well as to make land set aside for agricultural use available for the building of small houses and to allot a plot of land to each family. I think that each plot should be at least one hectare in size since it is impossible to construct a small-scale, perfectly developed, self-sustaining ecosystem on a smaller tract.

Families will become consumers rather than producers in the settlements around the cities if not given a sizable enough plot of land, which will further worsen the nation's food, ecological, and social conditions.

I make an appeal to the United States of America's President and Congress, the United Nations, and the leaders of all states who have a stake in the flourishing of the people who live there, and urge them to consider and accept the idea that establishing family homesteads are the most practical strategy for assisting nations in emerging from the current economic crisis, averting the impending ecological catastrophe, and avoiding a food crisis.

The "Family Homestead" concept has gained widespread support among Russians. May it spread to all nations, and may our nations compete with one another to bring forth a bright future.

The depression that is encroaching on us can be stopped if the governments of many nations really comprehend this concept, make it known, and support it. There will be the start of a global, inspiring process.

The "Family Homestead" plan's beneficial effects have already been demonstrated by the acts of thousands of Russian families. These declarations have been endorsed by more than 1500 Russian families who have already started developing their own family farms.

May this declaration serve as an example for every family to write and autograph their own.

As they imaginatively create a lovely environment where their family can live — in many nations and throughout the world — I wish all like-minded people prosperity and inspiration!
